Alternative GOP budget cuts gas taxes, business taxes, offers early state employee retirement

HARTFORD – The alternative Republican budget offered today would cut state gas taxes, eliminate a business tax and balance by offering thousands of state employees an early retirement plan that will reduce spending by $163 million next year, according to the non-partisan Office of Fiscal Analysis.

With just 10 days remaining in the legislative session House and Senate Republicans put forth a balanced tax and spending plan that will not raise taxes, streamlines government and will avoid potentially huge budget deficits in the coming years.

“We could have stood on the sidelines and wanted until the whole thing crashed and burned but we didn't want to do something so irresponsible. Last year we made a difference in the debate and we thought we would offer an alternative for taxpayers that are hurting and will likely hurt more before all is said and done. This Republican proposal offers the taxpayers some hope during a difficult economic time for many families,” said state Rep. Richard Ferrari (R-62).

Democratic leaders have said they are content to not make major changes in the 2008-09 budget because of recent drops in revenue projections. The Republican alternative would:

- Cut gas prices by 10 cents through a summer state tax moratorium and a roll back the scheduled gross receipts tax increase of .5 percent on July 1. Those roll backs will save consumers $50 millions Republicans said.
- Eliminate the $250 Business Entity Tax that all businesses pay just for opening their doors over two years to save $35 million ($17.5 million in the first year)
- Phase out of the so-called Death Tax cliff that will save families $24 million and help keep more people in Connecticut ($12 million in the first year).
- Offers up to 11,600 eligible state workers an early retirement incentive program (ERIP) to save a projected $163 million in the next fiscal year.

The ERIP offered in 2003 in the midst of the last state fiscal crisis saw more than 4,000 workers retire and cut the state payroll by more than $155 million. Republicans stressed that no state worker would lose his or her job because of the ERIP.

Cafero said the incentive plan will be a matter of personal choice and that the enrollment period could begin immediately.
